Market Review

In June the Federal Reserve (Fed) raised its short term Fed Funds rates for the second time in 2017, bringing the benchmark rate to a range of 1% to 1.25%. The central bank also detailed its plan to scale back its balance sheet by allowing part of its Treasury and mortgage-backed securities portfolio to mature every month. The market expects the additional tightening measure to be formally announced in the fourth quarter of 2017. Despite the Fed's action and talk the US dollar continued to weaken when compared to all major currencies, with the Dollar Index (US dollar) down a further 1.34% during the month. In that context the Australian dollar was one of the strongest performers, rising 3.25%. The strength of the domestic currency weighted heavily on the returns of international equities and real assets expressed in Australian dollar terms.

The MSCI AC World TR in USD was up 0.45% in US dollar terms but down 2.71% in Australian dollar terms. Emerging markets and Japan managed to outperform the US market, while Europe closed down due to some profit taking activity. Infrastructure (-3.11%) and property (-2.23%) were both down, although the latter exhibited some resilience stripping out the currency impact.

The S&P/ASX 300 TR (up 0.22%) was modestly up overall, with wide dispersion in sector performance. Banks and small caps outperformed while yield stocks were pummelled, dragging down utilities and telecommunication services. This outcome was driven by the sharp rise in domestic interest rates, with the short part of the curve reacting to improving economic data and the long end moving higher in sync with global yields; the 2, 5 and 10 years yields were up 18, 27 and 21 basis points respectively.

The European Central Bank (ECB) expressed optimism on Europe's growth outlook and signalled that it might adjust its policy tools of sub-zero interest rates and massive bond purchases as the recovery progresses, prompting a worldwide sell-off in government bonds. Consequently fixed income suffered, with the domestic and the global (hedged back to the Australian dollar) markets down 0.90% and 0.22%, respectively. Commodity Trading Advisors (CTA) and managed futures strategies were another casualty. Their negative performance held down alternatives (up 0.26%) however ended the month up due to positive contributions coming from long/short equity and arbitrage strategies.

Performance Review

In June, the Fund returned -0.76% net, underperforming the benchmark return of 0.40% net by -1.16%.

In June the Fund registered its first negative month for 2017. Five asset classes out of the eight the Fund invests in were negative, with both growth and defensive assets ending down for the month. However, the defensive assets still managed to outperform the growth assets. Positive contributions came from the Fund's underweight position in infrastructure (-5.16%) and property (-9.97%) and from the overweight position in Australian fixed income (up 2.63%) and alternatives (up 20.00%). Negative contributions came from the Fund's underweight positions in Australian equities (-3.46%), global fixed income (-1.87%) and cash (-1.65%). All in all, the tactical asset allocation outperformed the strategic asset allocation. That outcome was reinforced by the Fund's strong manager selection in both growth and defensive assets, tactical tilts and manager selection were responsible for 75% and 25% of the extra return, respectively. In fixed income, a higher credit/lower duration exposure compared to the indices substantially curbed losses. In Australian equities, an overweight position in mid cap growth stocks and in selected, non-consensus single stock positions drove the Fund to outperform a rising market. In International equities both the selection and the allocation effects were positive, despite only two managers out of four outperforming the index. The Fund's sizeable overweight position in emerging markets proved decisive in that regard once again.

At the end of the month, the investment manager reduced the Fund's exposure to Australian fixed income by 6.34%, reducing government and corporate equally to maintain an unchanged duration for this component of the Fund, while taking some profits in credit after a further contraction in spreads. In addition, the exposure to alternatives was reduced to 14.26% from 20.00% (down 5.74%). The investment manager liquidated the Fund's positions in Ironbark LHP Long Short Fund and Henderson Absolute Return Australian Equity Fund, zeroing the Fund's exposure to long/short equity strategies, to concentrate on discretionary macro. The proceeds were allocated to Australian equities (up 2.01%), International equities (up 5.21%) and infrastructure (up 9.62%). As a consequence, the exposure to growth assets has increased to 89.99% from 81.32% (up 8.67%). Within growth assets, the exposure to equity has increased to 62.70% from 56.87% (up 5.83%) while the exposure to real assets has increased to 13.03% from 4.45% (up 8.58%), with the bulk of it allocated to infrastructure. The composition of defensive assets has undergone a lesser change, as the exposure to fixed income has declined to 10.00% from 15.33% (down 5.33%) together with the exposure to cash, that has been basically brought to the minimum allowed. As a result, the sensitivity to interest rate risk of the overall portfolio has been reduced.

Market Outlook

The first hike in the Fed's Fund rates occurred on the 15th of December, 2015. Three more rises have followed so far, and this will become four by the end of December 2017 if the central bank maintains its current course of action. It is interesting to note that 18 months ago the US Dollar Index (DXY) was trading around the 98 level while today it is 3% lower, at 95. Similarly, US inflation has moved higher on the same time horizon, from 0.7% to 1.6%, briefly touching a top of 2.7% in February of this year. In other words, since the Fed has embarked on its plan to normalise its monetary policy, US inflation has grown while the value of the greenback has decreased on the foreign exchange market. The investment manager believes that this will persist going forward. Since the beginning of the year the DXY has shed roughly -7% in a steady fashion and the investment manager estimates a short-term bounce is overdue. Once it occurs, the investment manager expects the downward trend to resume.

Market Outlook (cont'd)

A world of higher US inflation and interest rates and lower US dollar is positive for commodities, cyclicals and financials, that is, the themes of the “reflation trade” may soon be back after a 6 month pause. Incidentally, the US “big tech” group of stocks, as exemplified by the Nasdaq 100, dropped while the rest of the market remained steady in June 2017. That event could be a signal of a coming change in the market regime. In fact, the technology sector is considered to be one of the primary beneficiaries of low (and falling) interest rates as it is largely constituted of “long duration” growth stories, however more underperformance could be in store for the sector. On the other hand, oil is currently trading at $46 per barrel (in US dollar terms), down almost 15% since the beginning of the year, and after having recovered from a low of $42 per barrel (in US dollar terms) reached in the middle of June. The investment manager suggests it may be time to revisit the ailing energy sector.
