Market Review

October delivered broadly positive returns across global asset markets, as investors balanced moderating inflation, easing trade tensions, and cautious central bank signals. Despite political uncertainty and a partial U.S. government shutdown that delayed economic data, equity markets advanced on resilient corporate earnings and optimism surrounding policy shifts.

U.S. equities extended their rally, with the S&P 500 up 2.3% for the month, led by strong results in technology and financials. Just over 80% of companies beat earnings expectations, averaging profit surprises of over 6%. Growth and AI-related sectors dominated, with growth stocks up 4.2% versus 0.4% for value, while small caps and real estate lagged. Investor enthusiasm for technology themes pushed valuations higher, although market participation remained narrow.

The Federal Reserve cut rates by 0.25% to a 3.75–4.00% range, confirming that quantitative tightening will end in December. Chair Jerome Powell struck a cautious tone, prompting markets to scale back expectations for further easing. The U.S. dollar strengthened about 2%, while Treasury yields finished little changed, with 10-year bonds near 4.1%. Credit markets steadied after early-month stress linked to several U.S. corporate defaults, and high-yield credit slightly outperformed investment grade debt.

Japanese equities were a standout performer, lifted by optimism following the election of Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi, who pledged pro-growth reforms and continued stimulus in the spirit of Abenomics. The Nikkei 225 index surged, supported by export-driven gains from a weaker yen. However, rising expectations of fiscal expansion nudged Japanese bond yields higher.

Across Asia, markets benefited from improving trade sentiment and China's ongoing stimulus. The MSCI Asia ex-Japan Index rose 4.5%, with South Korea (+23%) and Taiwan (+10%) leading gains, as semiconductor producers rallied on improved AI supply-chain outlooks. China's CSI 300 climbed 2.5% as the government expanded liquidity and relaxed property restrictions, though persistent youth unemployment and housing stress capped enthusiasm.

In Australia, equities underperformed, with the S&P/ASX 300 Accumulation Index up 0.4%, as stronger-than-expected inflation data curtailed hopes for near-term RBA interest rate cuts.

In Europe, equities advanced moderately. The Euro Stoxx 50 gained 2.8%, driven by luxury and auto stocks supported by recovering Chinese demand. The ECB kept rates steady for a third meeting as inflation fell to 2.2%, its lowest in three years. The UK's FTSE All-Share rose 3.7%, aided by a weaker pound and a 30-basis-point drop in gilt yields, as softer inflation boosted rate-sensitive sectors.

Emerging markets performed well overall, led by Argentina (+64%) after a pro-reform election result. Emerging-market debt (+2.2%) also outpaced developed markets, supported by high real yields and a softer dollar.

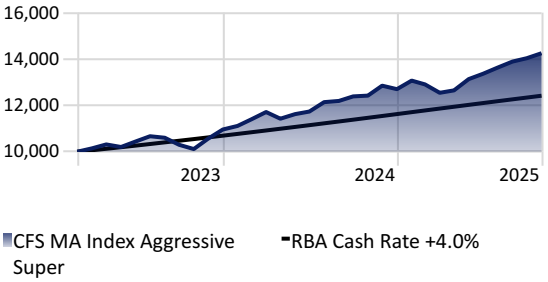

Commodities posted a 2.9% gain, led by industrial and precious metals, while gold regained safe-haven status amid geopolitical risks and record central-bank buying.

Overall, October reflected cautious optimism. Equities benefited from trade relief and resilient earnings, while bonds were mixed amid shifting rate expectations.

Portfolio changes

During October, we increased our exposure to Emerging Market equities by increasing our exposure to the Vanguard All-World ex-US Shares Index ETF and funded this by trimming the exposure to the CFS Index Global Share Fund.
